UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Case No. 1:21-cr-0045 (DLF)

ANDREW WILLIAMS,

Defendant. :

GOVERNMENT'S SENTENCING MEMORANDUM

The United States of America, by and through its attorney, the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia, respectfully submits this sentencing memorandum in connection with the above-captioned matter. For the reasons set forth herein, the government requests that this Court sentence Andrew Williams to a split sentence of 30 days' incarceration, two years of probation, 60 hours of community service, and $500 in restitution.

I. Introduction

The defendant, Andrew Williams, a firefighter, participated in the January 6, 2021 attack on the United States Capitol—a violent attack that forced an interruption of the certification of the 2020 Electoral College vote count, threatened the peaceful transfer of power after the 2020 Presidential election, injured more than one hundred law enforcement officers, and resulted in more than one million dollars' of property damage.

Williams pleaded guilty to one count of 40 U.S.C. § 5104(e)(2)(G): Parading, Demonstrating, or Picketing in the Capitol Building. As explained herein, a sentence of 30 days' incarceration and two years of probation is appropriate in this case because: (1) he penetrated deep inside the U.S. Capitol all the way to the Speaker's suite of offices; (2) he cheered, "we're storming the Capitol" while advancing towards the Capitol Building; (3) before entering the Capitol, he saw the broken glass the rioters had left behind following their violent breach of the building, which had been locked and closed to visitors; (4) once inside, he boasted that the outnumbered law enforcement officers could not arrest everyone; (5) he took pictures and videos inside the Capitol, which he shared with friends in a group chat; (5) his statements in text messages to friends after January 6 reveal a total lack of remorse; and (6) as a firefighter and EMT, Williams occupied a sensitive position and must have been aware of the grave physical danger the rioting mob posed to the occupants of the Capitol Building.

The Court must consider that the defendant's conduct on January 6, like the conduct of scores of other defendants, took place in the context of a large and violent riot that relied on numbers to overwhelm law enforcement, breach the Capitol, and disrupt the proceedings. But for his actions alongside so many others, the riot likely would have failed to delay the certification vote for several hours. See United States v. Matthew Mazzocco, 1:21-cr-00054 (TSC), Tr. 10/4/2021 at 25 ("A mob isn't a mob without the numbers. The people who were committing those violent acts did so because they had the safety of numbers.") (statement of Judge Chutkan). Here, the defendant's participation in a riot that actually succeeded in halting the Congressional certification combined with the defendant's entry into more restricted areas of the Capitol, taking pictures and videos inside the Capitol, his lack of remorse after the attack, and responsibility for public health and safety as a first responder explain why a sentence merely of probation would be unjustified.

II. Factual and Procedural Background

The January 6, 2021 Attack on the Capitol

To avoid exposition, the government refers to the general summary of the attack on the U.S. Capitol. See ECF 21 (Statement of Offense), at 1-7. As this Court knows, a riot cannot occur without rioters, and each rioter's actions – from the most mundane to the most violent – contributed, directly and indirectly, to the violence and destruction of that day. With that backdrop we turn to the defendant's conduct and behavior on January 6.

Andrew Williams's Role in the January 6, 2021 Attack on the Capitol

On January 5, 2021, Williams and a relative traveled to Washington, D.C., from his home in Florida to attend the "Step the Steal" rally. According to Williams in an interview with law enforcement in advance of sentencing, he and a relative stayed in a hotel in Washington, D.C. on January 5, 2021, and went to the National Mall very early on January 6th in order to attend the rally. Williams stayed for the entire rally but noticed some rally attendees left early and these included some individuals in tactical gear. That observation should have alerted Williams that those individuals were prepared for possible violent aggression.

After attending the Stop the Steal rally, Williams and his relative walked down the Mall to the Capitol Building. Once there, Williams climbed the exterior steps of the Capitol stairs near the scaffolding and smelled what he suspected was a chemical irritant in the air, which should have caused him to realize that violence had broken out. But rather than stepping away from that fraught scene, Williams continued to advance and yelled, "We are storming the Capitol! Yeah baby!" Williams noticed broken windows on the exterior of the Capitol and went in through an open door (the Senate Wing Door) at 2:26 p.m.

Once inside, Williams made his way to an area known as the Crypt where he was for approximately two minutes. While traveling throughout the Capitol, Williams said, among other things, "Taking it back, baby!"; "Thank you, fellow patriot!"; and "How are they going to arrest every single person?" These statements were captured on a video the defendant took of himself, a screenshot of which appears below:

From approximately 2:33-2:39 p.m., the defendant made his way to the suite of offices for the Speaker of the House where he was photographed by his relative:

Williams and his relative left the Capitol through the Memorial Door at approximately 2:40 p.m., having spent about 14 minutes inside the Capitol Building. Williams admitted that at the time he entered the U.S. Capitol Building he did not have permission to do so, and he engaged in disorderly and disruptive conduct in the Capitol Building with the intent to impede, disrupt, or disturb the orderly conduct of a session of Congress.

Williams shared pictures and videos of his participation in the Capitol Riot with friends on a group chat. The photo above and a video showing Williams climbing the exterior steps of the Capitol made their way to the media and were published on January 6, 2021. At some point that day after these images appeared on news websites, the president of Williams's union called him and expressed displeasure that his involvement in the riot had appeared on those news websites. Finally chastened, Williams pleaded with his friends not to share pictures and videos of him participating in the riot and expressed great frustration and regret that pictures of his participation made their way to the media and to his employer. For instance, on January 6, 2021, the defendant wrote, "Where did you get that photo!?"; "Guys, please don't share those photos videos... Should have thought 2wice before sending those out. Love you guys. Patriot out." The day after the riot, he wrote that he was "[p]retty sure this whole thing was a set up." In none of these messages did Williams express remorse for his conduct and participation in the riot. See PSR ¶ 24 (Williams agreed with the Statement of the Offense signed before his guilty plea but "declined to comment further on the instant offense"). That came only after Williams pleaded guilty, when he doubtlessly realized that an expression of contrition would be helpful to him at sentencing.

The Charges, Arrest, Search, and Plea Agreement

On January 11, 2021, the United States filed a complaint and obtained an arrest warrant based on alleged violations of 18 U.S.C. § 1752(a) and 40 U.S.C. § 5104(e)(2). The next day, the defendant was arrested after FBI agents contacted the defendant's lawyer and the defendant surrendered to law enforcement. Soon thereafter, agents executed a search warrant at the defendant's home in Florida. Among other items, agents recovered a roll of "Q" stickers and a photograph of a Democratic Member of Congress with a shooting target superimposed over her body and a beret with a hammer and sickle symbol on her head.<sup>1</sup> Later that day, the United States filed an Information charging the defendant with violations of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1752(a)(1) and (2). On November 1, 2021, the United States filed a Superseding Information charging the defendant with a violation of 40 U.S.C. § 5104(e)(2)(D) and the next day the defendant plead guilty to that offense.

Andrew Williams's Interview

Following his guilty plea and as required by the plea agreement, Williams was interviewed by law enforcement in advance of sentencing. During that interview, Williams admitted many of the above-described facts and provided additional details of the circumstances surrounding his participation in the riot. Among other things, the defendant said that, as he climbed up the Capitol steps, he saw only four to five police officers and, while entering, he saw 15 police officers nearby. He stated that he should not have engaged in the offense conduct, was now regretful, and that it did not feel like a riot at the time.

III. Statutory Penalties

The defendant now faces a sentencing on a single count of 40 U.S.C. § 5104(e)(2)(D). As noted by the plea agreement and the U.S. Probation Office, the defendant faces up to six months of imprisonment and a fine of up to $5,000. The defendant must also pay restitution under the terms of his plea agreement. See 18 U.S.C. § 3663(a)(3); United States v. Anderson, 545 F.3d 1072, 1078-79 (D.C. Cir. 2008). As this offense is a Class B Misdemeanor, the Sentencing Guidelines do not apply to it. 18 U.S.C. § 3559; U.S.S.G. §1B1.9.

&lt;sup>1</sup> During his pre-sentencing interview with law enforcement, Williams stated that this target was a "secret Santa" gift from a co-worker.

IV. Sentencing Factors Under 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)

In this misdemeanor case, sentencing is guided by 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a), which identifies the factors a court must consider in formulating the sentence. Some of those factors include: the nature and circumstances of the offense, § 3553(a)(1); the history and characteristics of the defendant, id.; the need for the sentence to reflect the seriousness of the offense and promote respect for the law, § 3553(a)(2)(A); the need for the sentence to afford adequate deterrence, § 3553(a)(2)(B); and the need to avoid unwarranted sentence disparities among defendants with similar records who have been found guilty of similar conduct. § 3553(a)(6). In this case, as described below, all of the Section 3553(a) factors weigh in favor of a period of incarceration.

A. The Nature and Circumstances of the Offense

The attack on the U.S. Capitol, on January 6, 2021 is a criminal offense unparalleled in American history. It represented a grave threat to our democratic norms; indeed, it was the one of the only times in our history when the building was literally occupied by hostile participants. The attack defies comparison to other events.

While each defendant should be sentenced based on their individual conduct, this Court should note that each person who entered the Capitol on January 6 without authorization did so under the most extreme of circumstances. As they entered the Capitol, they would—at a minimum—have crossed through numerous barriers and barricades and heard the throes of a mob. Depending on the timing and location of their approach, they also may have observed extensive fighting with law enforcement officials. Williams himself believed he smelled chemical irritants in the air. No rioter was a mere tourist that day.

Additionally, while looking at the defendant's individual conduct, the Court must assess such conduct on a spectrum. This Court, in determining a fair and just sentence on this spectrum, should look to a number of critical factors, to include: (1) whether, when, how the defendant entered the Capitol building; (2) whether the defendant encouraged violence; (3) whether the defendant encouraged property destruction; (4) the defendant's reaction to acts of violence or destruction; (5) whether during or after the riot, the defendant destroyed evidence; (6) the length of the defendant's time inside of the building, and exactly where the defendant traveled; (7) the defendant's statements in person or on social media; (8) whether the defendant cooperated with, or ignored commands from law enforcement officials; and (9) whether the defendant demonstrated sincere remorse or contrition. While these factors are not exhaustive nor dispositive, they help to place each defendant on a spectrum as to their fair and just punishment.

To be clear, had the defendant personally engaged in violence or destruction, he or she would be facing additional charges and/or penalties associated with that conduct. The absence of violent or destructive acts on the part of the defendant is therefore not a mitigating factor in misdemeanor cases, nor does it meaningfully distinguish the defendant from most other misdemeanor defendants. The defendant's lack of violence and property destruction explains why he was charged only with, and permitted to plead to, a misdemeanor rather than felony.

Even in the absence of violence and property destruction, the defendant's conduct was very serious. He scaled the Capitol with great glee, excitedly exclaiming that he was "Storming the Capitol." Despite seeing broken windows and other signs of chaos and greatly outnumbered law enforcement officers, the defendant entered the Capitol and found his way to at least one particularly sensitive area: the Speaker's suite of offices. Along the way, he celebrated his role in the mob and cheered on other rioters. Among other things, he yelled "Thank you fellow patriot!"

And he gloated that the outnumbered law enforcement officers might be unable to arrest all of the criminals participating in the attack on the Capitol. Once at the Speaker's Office, he posed for a picture that he soon shared with friends.

As a first responder, the defendant must have known that the rioting mob posed a great threat to the law enforcement officers heroically seeking to discharge their duties, not to mention the civilian occupants of the Capitol. But seeing greatly outnumbered police officers and broken windows did not give him pause or cause the defendant to turn away from the riot. Instead, he celebrated his role in the attack on the Capitol while breezing by his fellow first responders. By participating in the riot – indeed, by taunting the law enforcement officers charged with protecting the public – the defendant betrayed the public trust placed in him by his community.

The defendant's text messages in the immediate aftermath of the riot reflect a total lack of remorse for his own conduct and for the role he played. The defendant was concerned about the employment ramifications of his conduct, not the conduct itself.

Accordingly, the nature and the circumstances of this offense establish the clear need for a sentence that includes a period of incarceration.

B. The History and Characteristics of the Defendant

As set forth in the PSR, the defendant's criminal history consists of minor offenses including possession of marijuana, underage possession of alcohol, and disorderly conduct. All of these occurred over ten years ago.

Williams reported to the PSR writer that he joined the Sanford, Florida Fire Department as a firefighter and paramedic in October 2016 and worked there until he was placed on unpaid leave in January 2021. While Williams's service as a first responder is laudable, it renders his conduct on January 6 all the more troubling. His voluntary decision to storm a guarded government building – the seat of government, no less – is troubling in light of his years of work and training as a first responder. This prior work, which no doubt included efforts to save lives in very harrowing circumstances, did not cause Williams to so much as break his stride while storming the Capitol and thus demonstrates a very real need for specific deterrence in the form of a period of incarceration.

C. The Need for the Sentence Imposed to Reflect the Seriousness of the Offense and Promote Respect for the Law

The attack on the U.S. Capitol building and grounds was an attack on the rule of law. "The violence and destruction of property at the U.S. Capitol on January 6 showed a blatant and appalling disregard for our institutions of government and the orderly administration of the democratic process." As with the nature and circumstances of the offense, this factor supports a sentence of incarceration, as it will in most cases, including misdemeanor cases, arising out of the January 6 riot. See United States v. Joshua Bustle and Jessica Bustle, 21-cr-238-TFH, Tr. 08/24/21 at 3 ("As to probation, I don't think anyone should start off in these cases with any presumption of probation. I think the presumption should be that these offenses were an attack on our democracy and that jail time is usually -- should be expected") (statement of Judge Hogan).

D. The Need for the Sentence to Afford Adequate Deterrence

Deterrence encompasses two goals: general deterrence, or the need to deter crime generally, and specific deterrence, or the need to protect the public from further crimes by this defendant. 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(2)(B-C), United States v. Russell, 600 F.3d 631, 637 (D.C. Cir. 2010).

&lt;sup>2</sup> Federal Bureau of Investigation Director Christopher Wray, Statement before the House Oversight and Reform Committee (June 15, 2021), available at https://oversight.house.gov/sites/democrats.oversight.house.gov/files/Wray%20 Testimony.pdf

General Deterrence

The demands of general deterrence weigh in favor of incarceration, as they will for nearly every case arising out of the violent riot at the Capitol. Indeed, general deterrence may be the most compelling reason to impose a sentence of incarceration. For the violence at the Capitol on January 6 was cultivated to interfere, and did interfere, with one of the most important democratic processes we have: the peaceful transfer of power to a newly elected President. As noted by Judge Moss during sentencing, in United States v. Paul Hodgkins, 21-cr-188-RDM:

[D]emocracy requires the cooperation of the governed. When a mob is prepared to attack the Capitol to prevent our elected officials from both parties from performing their constitutional and statutory duty, democracy is in trouble. The damage that [the defendant] and others caused that day goes way beyond the several-hour delay in the certification. It is a damage that will persist in this country for decades.

Tr. at 69-70. Indeed, the attack on the Capitol means "that it will be harder today than it was seven months ago for the United States and our diplomats to convince other nations to pursue democracy. It means that it will be harder for all of us to convince our children and our grandchildren that democracy stands as the immutable foundation of this nation." Id. at 70; see United States v. Matthew Mazzocco, 1:21-cr-00054 (TSC), Tr. 10/4/2021 at 24 ("What happened on that day was nothing less than the attempt of a violent mob to prevent the orderly and peaceful certification of an election as part of the transition of power from one administration to the next, something that has happened with regularity over the history of this country. That mob was trying to overthrow the government.") (statement of Judge Chutkan).

The gravity of these offenses demands deterrence. This was not a protest. See United States v. Paul Hodgkins, 21-cr-188-RDM, Tr. at 46 ("I don't think that any plausible argument can be made defending what happened in the Capitol on January 6th as the exercise of First Amendment rights.") (statement of Judge Moss). And it is important to convey to future potential rioters—especially those who intend to improperly influence the democratic process—that their actions will have consequences. There is possibly no greater factor that this Court must consider.

Specific Deterrence

As described above, the defendant's conduct and statements in the immediate aftermath of the attack demonstrate the need for specific deterrence. Despite knowing firsthand the perils and bravery of first responders, the defendant contributed to the danger to public safety posed by the mob and even celebrated the fact that rioters greatly outnumbered the brave law enforcement officers. He also celebrated his conduct during commission of the offense, cheering "Yeah baby!" while climbing the steps of the Capitol and referring to himself and other rioters as "patriots." While he did express regret during his pre-sentencing interview with law enforcement, his text messages in the immediate aftermath of the attack reflect that he felt no such remorse at that time.

E. The Need to Avoid Unwarranted Sentencing Disparities

As the Court is aware, the government has charged hundreds of individuals for their roles in this one-of-a-kind assault on the Capitol, ranging from unlawful entry misdemeanors, such as in this case, to assault on law enforcement officers, to conspiracy to corruptly interfere with Congress.<sup>3</sup> Each offender must be sentenced based on their individual circumstances, but with the backdrop of the January 6 riot in mind. Moreover, each offender's case will exist on a spectrum that ranges from conduct meriting a probationary sentence to crimes necessitating years of imprisonment. The misdemeanor defendants will generally fall on the lower end of that spectrum, but misdemeanor breaches of the Capitol on January 6, 2021 were not minor crimes. A probationary sentence should not become the default. See United States v. Anna Morgan-Lloyd, 1:21-cr-00164 (RCL), Tr. 6/23/2021 at 19 ("I don't want to create the impression that probation is the automatic outcome here because it's not going to be.") (statement of Judge Lamberth).

&lt;sup>3</sup> Attached to this sentencing memorandum is a table providing additional information about the sentences imposed on other Capitol breach defendants. That table also shows that the requested sentence here would not result in unwarranted sentencing disparities. See, e.g., United States v. Hatley, 1:21-cr-98 (TFH), Tr. 12/16/21 at 3 ("it's a good guideline for the Court to understand the variety of sentences that have been given [referencing the government's sentencing chart]") (statement of Judge Hogan).

The government and the sentencing courts have already begun to make meaningful distinctions between offenders. Those who engaged in felonious conduct are generally more dangerous, and thus, treated more severely in terms of their conduct and subsequent punishment. Those who trespassed and engaged in serious aggravating factors, such as Williams, should be sentenced to a term of incarceration. Those who trespassed, but engaged in less serious aggravating factors, deserve a sentence more in line with minor incarceration or home detention.

The defendant has pleaded guilty to Count One of the Superseding Information, charging him with Parading, Demonstrating, or Picketing in the Capitol Building, a violation of 40 U.S.C. § 5104(e)(2)(G). This offense is a Class B misdemeanor. 18 U.S.C. § 3559. Certain Class B and C misdemeanors and infractions are "petty offenses," 18 U.S.C. § 19, to which the Sentencing Guidelines do not apply, U.S.S.G. 1B1.9. The sentencing factors set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a), including "the need to avoid unwarranted sentence disparities among defendants with similar misdemeanor cases that included an agreement to recommend probation in United States v. Anna Morgan-Lloyd, 1:21-cr-00164(RCL); United States v. Valerie Elaine Ehrke, 1:21-cr-00097(PFF); United States v. Donna Sue Bissey, 1:21-cr-00165(TSC), United States v. Douglas K. Wangler, 1:21-cr-00365(DLF), and United States v. Bruce J. Harrison, 1:21-cr-00365(DLF). The government is abiding by its agreements in those cases, but has made no such agreement in this case. Cf. United States v. Rosales-Gonzales, 801 F.3d 1177, 1183 (9th Cir. 2015) (no unwarranted sentencing disparities under 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(6) between defendants who plead guilty under a "fast-track" program and those who do not given the "benefits gained by the government when defendants plead guilty early in criminal proceedings") (citation omitted).

records who have been found guilty of similar conduct," 18 U.S.C.A. § 3553(6), do apply, however.

For one thing, although all the other defendants discussed below participated in the Capitol breach on January 6, 2021, many salient differences—such as how a defendant entered the Capitol, how long he remained inside, the nature of any statements he made (on social media or otherwise), whether he destroyed evidence of his participation in the breach, etc.—help explain the differing recommendations and sentences. And as that discussion illustrates, avoiding unwarranted disparities requires the courts to consider not only a defendant's "records" and "conduct" but other relevant sentencing criteria, such as a defendant's expression of remorse or cooperation with law enforcement. See United States v. Hemphill, 514 F.3d 1350, 1365 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (no unwarranted disparity regarding lower sentence of codefendant who, unlike defendant, pleaded guilty and cooperated with the government).

Even in Guidelines cases, sentencing courts are permitted to consider sentences imposed on co-defendants in assessing disparity. E.g., United States v. Knight, 824 F.3d 1105, 1111 (D.C. Cir. 2016); United States v. Mejia, 597 F.3d 1329, 1343-44 (D.C. Cir. 2010); United States v. Bras, 483 F.3d 103, 114 (D.C. Cir. 2007). The Capitol breach was sui generis: a mass crime with significant distinguishing features, including the historic assault on the seat of legislative branch of federal government, the vast size of the mob, the goal of impeding if not preventing the peaceful transfer of Presidential power, the use of violence by a substantial number of rioters against law enforcement officials, and large number of victims. Thus, even though many of the defendants were not charged as conspirators or as codefendants, the sentences handed down for Capitol breach offenses is an appropriate group for purposes of measuring disparity of any future sentence.

While no previously sentenced case contains the same balance of aggravating and mitigating factors present here, the Court may also consider the sentences imposed on Virgina Spencer, Derek Jancart, Erik Rau, and Matthew Mazzocco. Jankart and Rau made it to the Speaker's conference room for a very short period of time (Rau stayed inside the room for 15 seconds) and were each sentenced to 45 days' incarceration for violations of 40 U.S.C. § 5104(e)(2)(G). See United States v. Jankart, 21-cr-148 (JEB); United States v. Erik Rau, 21-cr-467 (JEB). Spencer entered the Speaker's office suite before turning around and was sentenced to 90 days' incarceration. See United States v. Spencer, 21-cr-147 (CKK). Mazzocco remained in the Capitol for 12 minutes, traveled to the Crypt and Spouse's Lounge, and his late expressions of remorse were belied but statements to friends immediately after the Capitol Attack. He was sentenced to 45 days' incarceration. See United States v. Mazzocco, 21-cr-54 (TSC).<sup>5</sup>

In any event, the goal of minimizing unwarranted sentencing disparities in § 3553(a)(6) is "only one of several factors that must be weighted and balanced," and the degree of weight is "firmly committed to the discretion of the sentencing judge." United States v. Coppola, 671 F.3d 220, 254 (2d Cir. 2012). The § 3553(a) factors that this Court assesses are "open-ended," with the result that "different district courts may have distinct sentencing philosophies and may emphasize and weigh the individual § 3553(a) factors differently; and every sentencing decision involves its own set of facts and circumstances regarding the offense and the offender." United States v. Gardellini, 545 F.3d 1089, 1093 (D.C. Cir. 2008). "[D]ifferent district courts can and will sentence differently—differently from the Sentencing Guidelines range, differently from the sentence an appellate court might have imposed, and differently from how other district courts might have sentenced that defendant." Id. at 1095.

V. The Court's Lawful Authority to Impose a Split Sentence

The sentence requested by the government—30 days of incarceration followed by 24 months of probation—is a lawful one. A sentencing court may impose a "split sentence"—"a period of incarceration followed by period of probation," Foster v. Wainwright, 820 F. Supp. 2d 36, 37 n.2 (D.D.C. 2011) (citation omitted)—for a defendant convicted of a federal petty offense, such as the crime at issue in this case. See 18 U.S.C. § 3561(a)(3). In addition, for a defendant convicted of any federal offense, a sentencing court may impose incarceration for a brief interval as a condition of probation under 18 U.S.C. § 3563(b)(10).

a. A sentence imposed for a petty offense may include both incarceration and probation.

i. Relevant Background

In 1984, Congress enacted the Sentencing Reform Act, which in substantial part remains the sentencing regime that exists today. See Pub. L. No. 98–473, §§211-212, 98 Stat 1837 (1984), codified at 18 U.S.C. § 3551 et seq.; see Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 365-66 (1989) (noting that the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984 wrought "sweeping changes" to federal criminal sentencing). That legislation falls in Chapter 227 of Title 18, which covers "Sentences." Chapter 227, in turn, consists of subchapter A ("General Provisions"), subchapter B ("Probation"), subchapter C ("Fines"), and subchapter D ("Imprisonment). Two provisions—one from subchapter A and one from subchapter B—are relevant to the question of whether a sentencing court may impose a term of continuous incarceration that exceeds two weeks<sup>6</sup> followed by a term of probation, such as the sentence requested by the United States here.

First, in subchapter A, 18 U.S.C. § 3551 sets out "[a]uthorized sentences." Section 3551(a) makes clear that a "defendant who has been found guilty of" any federal offense "shall be sentenced in accordance with the provisions of" Chapter 227 "[e]xcept as otherwise specifically provided." 18 U.S.C. § 3551(a). Section 3551(b) provides that a federal defendant shall be sentenced to "(1) a term of probation as authorized by subchapter B; (2) a fine as authorized by subchapter C; or (3) a term of imprisonment as authorized by subchapter D." 18 U.S.C. § 3551(b). As a general matter, therefore, "a judge must sentence a federal offender to either a fine, a term of probation, or a term of imprisonment." United States v. Kopp, 922 F.3d 337, 340 (7th Cir. 2019).

Second, 18 U.S.C. § 3561, the first provision in subchapter B, addresses a "[s]entence of probation." As initially enacted, Section 3561 provided that a federal defendant may be sentenced to a term of probation "unless . . . (1) the offense is a Class A or Class B felony and the defendant is an individual; (2) the offense is an offense for which probation has been expressly precluded; or (3) the defendant is sentenced at the same time to a term of imprisonment for the same or a different offense." Pub. L. No. 98-473, at § 212; see United States v. Anderson, 787 F. Supp. 537, 539 (D. Md. 1992) (noting that the Sentencing Reform Act did not permit "a period of 'straight' imprisonment . . . at the same time as a sentence of probation").

Congress, however, subsequently amended Section 3561(a)(3). In 1991, Congress considered adding the following sentence to the end of Section 3561(a)(3): "However, this paragraph does not preclude the imposition of a sentence to a term of probation for a petty offense if the defendant has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment at the same time for another such offense." H.R. Rep. 102-405, at 167 (1991). Instead, three years later Congress revised Section 3561(a)(3) by appending the phrase "that is not a petty offense" to the end of the then-existing language. See H.R. Rep. No. 103-711, at 887 (1994) (Conference Report). In its current form, therefore, Section 3561(a)(3) provides that a defendant "may be sentenced to a term of probation unless . . . the defendant is sentenced at the same time to a term of imprisonment for the same or a different offense that is not a petty offense." 18 U.S.C. § 3561(a)(3).

ii. Analysis

Before Congress passed the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984, sentencing courts could impose a split sentence on a federal defendant in certain cases. See United States v. Cohen, 617 F.2d 56, 59 (4th Cir. 1980) (noting that a sentencing statute enacted in 1958 had as its "primary purpose . . . to enable a judge to impose a short sentence, not exceeding sixth months, followed by probation on a one count indictment"); see also United States v. Entrekin, 675 F.2d 759, 760-61 (5th Cir. 1982) (affirming a split sentence of six months' incarceration followed by three years of probation). In passing the Sentencing Reform Act, Congress sought generally to abolish the practice of splitting a sentence between imprisonment and probation because "the same result" could be accomplished through a "more direct and logically consistent route," namely the use of supervised release as set out in 18 U.S.C. §§ 3581 and 3583. S. Rep. No. 225, 1983 WL 25404, at *89; accord United States Sentencing Guidelines ("U.S.S.G." or "Guidelines") § 5B1.1, Background. But Congress's 1994 amendment to Section 3561(a)(3) reinstated a sentencing court's authority to impose a split sentence for a petty offense.

Under 18 U.S.C. § 3561, a defendant "may be sentenced to a term of probation unless . . . the defendant is sentenced at the same time to a term of imprisonment for the same or a different offense that is not a petty offense." 18 U.S.C. § 3561(a)(3). Thus, for any federal offense other than a petty offense, Section 3561(a)(3) prohibits "imposition of both probation and straight imprisonment," consistent with the general rule in Section 3551(b). United States v. Forbes, 172 F.3d 675, 676 (9th Cir. 1999); see United States v. Martin, 363 F.3d 25, 31 (1st Cir. 2004); United States v. Harris, 611 F. App'x 480, 481 (9th Cir. 2015); Anderson, 787 F. Supp. at 539.

But the statutory text of 18 U.S.C. § 3561(a)(3) goes further by permitting a court to sentence a defendant to a term of probation "unless" that defendant "is sentenced at the same time to a term of imprisonment for the same or a different offense that is not a petty offense." 18 U.S.C. § 3561(a)(3). It follows that when a defendant is sentenced for a petty offense, that defendant may be sentenced to a period of continuous incarceration and a term of probation. See United States v. Posley, 351 F. App'x 807, 809 (4th Cir. 2009) (per curiam). In Posley, the defendant, convicted of a petty offense, was sentenced to two years of probation with the first six months in prison. Id. at 808. In affirming that sentence, the Fourth Circuit concluded that Section 3561(a)(3) "[u]nquestionably" provided statutory authority to sentence the petty-offense defendant to "a term" of six months of continuous imprisonment plus probation." Id. at 809; see Cyclopedia of Federal Procedure, § 50:203, Capacity of court to impose probationary sentence on defendant in conjunction with other sentence that imposes term of imprisonment (3d ed. 2021) ("[W]here the defendant is being sentenced for a petty offense, a trial court may properly sentence such individual to a term of continuous imprisonment for a period of time, as well as a sentence of probation.") (citing Posley); see also Wright and Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure, § 547, at n.13 (4th ed. 2021) ("A defendant may be sentenced to probation unless he . . . is sentenced at the same time to imprisonment for an offense that is not petty.") (emphasis added).

Nor does the phrase "that is not a petty offense" in Section 3561(a)(3) modify only "different offense." Section 3561(a)(3) does not state "the same offense or a different offense that is not a petty offense," which would imply that the final modifier—i.e., "that is not a petty offense"—applies only to "different offense." The phrase "that is not a petty offense" is a postpositive modifier best read to apply to the entire, integrated phrase "the same or a different offense." See Antonin Scalia & Bryan A. Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts 148 (2012). Had Congress sought to apply the phrase "not a petty offense" solely to "different offense," the "typical way in which syntax would suggest no carryover modification" would be some language that "cut[s] off the modifying phrase so its backward reach is limited." Id. at 148-49. And while the indefinite article "a" might play that role in other contexts (e.g., "either a pastry or cake with icing" vs. "either a pastry or a cake with icing"), the indefinite article in Section 3561(a)(3) merely reflects the fact that the definite article before "same" could not naturally apply to the undefined "different offense."

Permitting a combined sentence of continuous incarceration and probation for petty offenses is sensible because sentencing courts cannot impose supervised release on petty-offense defendants. See 18 U.S.C. § 3583(b)(3); United States v. Jourdain, 26 F.3d 127, 1994 WL 209914, at *1 (8th Cir. 1994) (unpublished) (plain error to impose a term of supervised release for a petty offense). When Congress in 1994 amended the language in Section 3561(a), it again provided sentencing courts with "latitude," see S. Rep. 98-225, 1983 WL 25404, at *89, to ensure some degree of supervision—through probation—following incarceration.

Section 3551(b)'s general rule that a sentencing court may impose either imprisonment or probation (but not both) does not preclude a sentencing court from imposing a split sentence under Section 3561(a)(3) for a petty offense for three reasons. First, Section 3551(a) notes that the sentencing provisions described there apply "[e]xcept as otherwise specifically provided." Section 3561(a)(3) does "provide[]" "otherwise": it recognizes a carveout for petty offenses.

Second, the more specific permission for split sentences in petty offense cases in Section 3561(a)(3) prevails over the general prohibition on split sentences in Section 3551(b). See Morton v. Mancari, 417 U.S. 535, 550-51 (1974) ("Where there is no clear intention otherwise, a specific statute will not be controlled or nullified by a general one."). When Congress enacted the general prohibition on split sentences in Section 3551(b), it had not yet enacted the more specific carveout for split sentences in petty offense cases in Section 3561(a)(3). See supra, at 21 (recounting statutory history). That carveout does not "void" the general prohibition on split sentences in Section 3551(b); rather, Section 3551(b)'s general prohibition's "application to cases covered by the specific provision [in Section 3651(a)(3)] is suspended" as to petty offense cases. Scalia & Garner, supra, at 184. In other words, Section 3551(b)'s prohibition against split sentences "govern[s] all other cases" apart from a case involving a petty offense. Ibid.

Third, to the extent Section 3551(b)'s general prohibition against split sentences conflicts with Section 3561(a)(3)'s permission for split sentences in petty offense cases, the latter, later-enacted provision controls. See Posadas v. Nat'l Bank of N.Y., 296 U.S. 497, 503 (1936) ("Where provisions in the two acts are in irreconcilable conflict, the later act to the extent of the conflict constitutes an implied repeal of the earlier one."); Scalia & Garner, supra, at 327-329. Where a conflict exists "between a general provision and a specific one, whichever was enacted later might be thought to prevail." Id. at 185. "The "specific provision"—here Section 3561(a)(3)—"does not negate the general one entirely, but only in its application to the situation that the specific provision covers." Ibid. Section 3551(b)'s general prohibition does not operate against the more specific, later-enacted carveout for split sentences in Section 3561(a)(3).

An interpretation of Sections 3551(b) and 3561(a) that a sentencing court "must choose between probation and imprisonment when imposing a sentence for a petty offense," United States v. Spencer, No. 21-cr-147-CKK, Doc. 70 at 5 (Jan. 19, 2022), fails to accord the phrase "that is not a petty offense" in Section 3561(a)(3) any meaning. When Congress in 1994 amended Section 3561(a)(3) to include that phrase, it specifically permitted a sentencing court in a petty offense case to deviate from the otherwise applicable general prohibition on combining continuous incarceration and probation in a single sentence. Ignoring that amended language would improperly fail to "give effect to every clause and word" of Section 3561(a)(3). Marx v. Gen. Revenue Corp., 568 U.S. 371, 385 (2013).

Congress's unenacted language from 1991, see supra, at 21, does not suggest that a split sentence is available only where a defendant is sentenced at the same time for two different petty offenses or for two offenses, at least one of which is a petty offense. For one thing, the Supreme Court has regularly rejected arguments based on unenacted legislation given the difficulty of determining whether a prior bill prompted objections because it went too far or not far enough. See Mead Corp. v. Tilley, 490 U.S. 714, 723 (1989) ("We do not attach decisive significance to the unexplained disappearance of one word from an unenacted bill because 'mute intermediate legislative maneuvers' are not reliable indicators of congressional intent.") (citation omitted). Moreover, under that view, every offense other than a petty offense could include some period of incarceration and some period of supervision (whether that supervision is supervised release or probation). Yet so long as a defendant was convicted of two petty offenses, that defendant could be sentenced to incarceration and supervision (in the form of probation). No sensible penal policy supports that interpretation.

It follows that a sentencing court may impose a combined sentence of incarceration and probation where, as here, the defendant is convicted of a petty offense. Here, Williams pleaded guilty to one count of 40 U.S.C. § 5104(d): Stepping on, Climbing, Removing, or Injuring Property on U.S. Capitol Grounds, which is a "petty offense" that carries a maximum penalty that does not exceed six months in prison and a $5,000 fine. See 18 U.S.C. § 19; see United States v. Soderna, 82 F.3d 1370, 1381 n.2 (7th Cir. 1996) (Kanne, J., concurring) (citations omitted) (noting that a petty offender may face a sentence of up to five years in probation).

b. A sentence of probation may include incarceration as a condition of probation, though logistical and practical reasons may militate against such a sentence during an ongoing pandemic.

i. Relevant Background

In 18 U.S.C. § 3563, Congress set out "[c]onditions of probation." 18 U.S.C. § 3563.

Among the discretionary conditions of probation a sentencing court may impose is a requirement that a defendant remain in the custody of the Bureau of Prisons during nights, weekends or other intervals of time, totaling no more than the lesser of one year or the term of imprisonment authorized for the offense, during the first year of the term of probation or supervised release.

18 U.S.C. § 3563(b)(10). Congress enacted this provision to give sentencing courts "flexibility" to impose incarceration as a condition of probation in one of two ways. S. Rep. No. 225, 1983 WL 25404, at *98. First, a court can direct that a defendant be confined in "split intervals" over weekends or at night. Id. Second, a sentencing court can impose "a brief period of confinement" such as "for a week or two." Id.<sup>8</sup>

ii. Analysis

A sentencing court may impose one or more intervals of imprisonment up to a year (or, as here, up to the six-month statutory maximum) as a condition of probation, so long as the imprisonment occurs during "nights, weekends or other intervals of time." 18 U.S.C. § 3653(b)(10). Although the statute does not define an "interval of time," limited case law suggests that it should amount to a "brief period" of no more than a "week or two" at a time. United States v. Mize, No. 97-40059, 1998 WL 160862, at *2 (D. Kan. Mar. 18, 1998) (quoting Section 3563(b)(10)'s legislative history described above and reversing magistrate's sentence that included 30-day period of confinement as a condition of probation); accord United States v. Baca, No. 11-1, 2011 WL 1045104, at *2 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 18, 2011) (concluding that two 45-day periods of continuous incarceration as a condition of probation was inconsistent with Section 3563(b)(10)); see also Anderson, 787 F. Supp. at 538 (continuous 60-day incarceration not appropriate as a condition of probation); Forbes, 172 F.3d at 676 ("[S]ix months is not the intermittent incarceration that this statute permits."). Accordingly, a sentence of up to two weeks' imprisonment served in one continuous term followed by a period of probation is permissible under Section 3563(b)(10). The government does not seek such a sentence for Williams here.

&lt;sup>8</sup> Section 3563(b)(10)'s legislative history notes that imprisonment as a term of probation was "not intended to carry forward the split sentence provided in Section 3561, by which the judge imposes a sentence of a few months in prison followed by probation." S. Rep. No. 225, 1983 WL 25404, at *98.

&lt;sup>9</sup> Section 3563(b)(10)'s use of the plural to refer to "nights, weekends, or intervals of time" does not imply that a defendant must serve multiple stints in prison. Just as "words importing the singular include and apply to several persons, parties, or things," "words importing the plural include the singular." 1 U.S.C. § 1; see Scalia & Garner, supra, at 129-31.

A sentencing court may also impose "intermittent" confinement as a condition of probation to be served in multiple intervals during a defendant's first year on probation. 18 U.S.C. § 3563(b)(10); see Anderson, 787 F. Supp. at 539. Notwithstanding a sentencing court's legal authority to impose intermittent confinement in this manner, the government has refrained from requesting such a sentence in Capitol breach cases given the potential practical and logistical concerns involved when an individual repeatedly enters and leaves a detention facility during an ongoing global pandemic. Those concerns would diminish if conditions improve or if a given facility is able to accommodate multiple entries and exits without unnecessary risk of exposure. In this case, the government does not request that imprisonment be imposed through "intermittent" confinement as a condition of probation.

VI. Conclusion

Sentencing requires the Court to carefully balance the § 3553(a) factors. As explained herein, some of those factors support a sentence of incarceration and some support a more lenient sentence. Balancing these factors, the government recommends that this Court sentence Andrew Williams to 30 days' incarceration, two years of probation, 60 hours of community service, and $500 in restitution. Such a sentence protects the community, promotes respect for the law, and deters future crime by imposing restrictions on his liberty as a consequence of his behavior, while recognizing his early acceptance of responsibility.
